

Myths about ADHD

Myth: ADHD is not a real condition.

Fact: ADHD is a neuro-biological disorder. Brain imaging studies show that the brains of individuals with ADHD are structurally and chemically different.

Myth: ADHD is caused by poor parenting.

Fact: ADHD is not caused by poor parenting, lack of discipline, too much sugar, too much TV, or preservatives. Almost ¾ of cases seem to be inherited. However, ADHD children will benefit from stability and consistent management strategies at home and in school.

Myth: ADHD is over-treated.

Fact: Although there are no blood or other lab tests to confirm ADHD, there are precise diagnostic criteria that health care providers use to make an accurate diagnosis. Studies show that unmanaged ADHD is associated with less success in school, higher drop out and delinquency rates, more accidents and fewer friends. A multimodal approach such as psychological counselling, support strategies, and medication, are among the most effective approaches to managing ADHD.

Quick Facts... About ADHD

Did You Know...

- You are not alone. ADHD affects 3-to-7 % of children and 2-to-4 % of adults.
- ADHD seems to run in families and affects people of all IQ levels and social and economic backgrounds.
- Not all individuals with ADHD are hyperactive. Some may have excessive levels of hyperactivity, impulsivity, inattention, or a mixture of all three.
- If ADHD is treated effectively it can help individuals reach their inherent potential.

Attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorder

(AD/HD) is characterized by developmentally inappropriate levels of inattention, impulsivity, and hyperactivity. These symptoms usually first seen in childhood cause impairment in social, academic or occupational functioning and are not better accounted for by other diagnosable conditions. Until relatively recently, it was believed that children outgrew AD/HD in adolescence as hyperactivity often diminishes during the teen years. However, it is now known that AD/HD nearly always persists from childhood through adolescence and that many symptoms continue into adulthood.
